BIOGRAPHY - Noor Ahmad Noor

Democratic Republic of Afghanistan

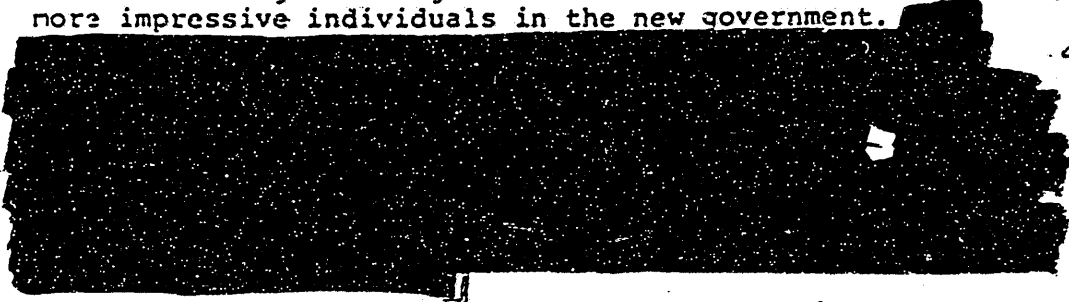

The nomination of Noor Ahmed Noor to be Afghan Ambassador to the United States came as a surprise. Noor is presently Minister of Interior in the new Afghan Government. He has long been associated with the Parcham (banner) faction of the ruling Democratic People's Party. However, the leaders of this faction (including Noor) are apparently losing out in a power struggle and several are now being sent abroad as ambassadors where they will be less of a domestic threat to the Taraki government.

Noor was born in 1937 in Kandahar Province and he studied political science at Kabul University, graduating in 1961. He then completed his military service and worked for several years in the Afghan Foreign Ministry in a minor capacity.

In 1965 Noor was elected a member of Parliament. He resigned from Parliament in 1969 and spent his time in party activities.

There is general agreement that Noor is one of the more impressive individuals in the new government.

Noor's knowledge of English is weak though he seems to understand it better than to speak it. He is married and has one son.

Noor should be an interesting addition to the Washington diplomatic scene.

A thorough search of U.S. Government sources reveals no grounds for objection.
